your mission, should you choose to accept it

The rising star forum is a place for up-and-coming designers to share best practices and expand their leadership skills. Developing tomorrow's leaders creates an automatic backup, and builds multi-level and multi-faceted strengths within your design department.

sample topics

- how best to support a furniture sale (and up sell)
- changing "can't do" into "can do"
- time management tools and tactics
- departmental best practices advantages of developing rising stars

- a win 3D
 - your designer is empowered
 - your design manager has support
 - your company/department has a succession plan
- creates a built-in back-up system: less chaos when the design manager is out
- incentive and recognition: the rising star gains confidence, direction and drive disadvantages of not developing rising stars

- loss of potential if designers aren't continually growing and developing
- lost investment of time and money when designers are disengaged, and the department becomes stagnant
- designers may quit if they don't feel like there is room for growth after being a part of this group, a rising star would

- take the initiative in supporting the design manager
- contribute to the design department as a bolder better faster leader
- become a significant participant in the sales process
- be loyal to the company because the investment in his/her growth
- realize that his/her work contributes to the profitability of the company
