The workstation portion of this project required six of our designers to work in concert for several months. This project had zero punch list after installation and was completed remotely.

case study

Our firm has been a value partner with Elements, an office furniture dealer in Denver, over the last year to provide furniture planning for the 2,700 workstation Charles Schwab Denver Headquarters. We have also provided ongoing furniture planning and specification services to them for 10 years.

PROJECT OBJECTIVES

- Develop typical workstations for different departments
- Determine layouts to best utilize the space
- Assess power requirements needed and translate into systems furniture
- Provide drawings and specifications for 2,700 workstations
- Follow up on all details to ensure a successful furniture order and installation

Because all work has been done remotely, exemplary communication, strong relationships, and a “can do” attitude are the elements that have allowed this project to not only be successful, but also enjoyable. This is our main goal regardless of the role we are playing in the process.

“Since I took over the department and made it mandatory to send all spec checks out to your firm, we have cut our design errors/negative margin down by 75%. So THANK YOU for helping us not only be better, but for also helping us to be more profitable!”
